

Effective field theory and nuclear forces

Evgeny Epelbaum

Ruhr University, Bochum

Understanding nuclear structure and reactions based on quantum chromodynamics is one of the important challenges of contemporary nuclear physics. Considerable progress has been made in recent years towards this goal using the framework of effective field theory. These lectures will provide a pedagogical introduction into the effective field theory approach and its application to the nuclear force problem.